ASCS TODAY

By Tom Conrad

ASCS and You - To the people it serves, the office on Court Street is a familiar and vital center of operations. To the many it doesn't serve, the importance and necessity of the ASCS may be a mystery.

It is through this office that Appomattox County farmers receive information from the U.S. Department of Agriculture. The information is coordinated and passed along by the local office to farms in the county.

Our purpose is to direct locally the laws passed through congressional legislation. It is our responsibility to sift through the many handbooks and then apply them to the needs of county farmers. Then with the cooperation of two program assistants, radio, newspapers and the mimeograph, we communicate with farmers, informing them on the variety of changes and programs.

Some of the programs applied by the local office during 1978 were: the feed grain and wheat programs, tobacco programs, wool program, commodity loan programs forestry incentives program and grain disaster program.

The agricultural conservation program is designed to make a conservation problem easier, in which a farmer may be facing, which he could not otherwise afford to correct. Over 100 farmers in the county participated in this program in 1978.

We have a complete set of aerial photographs which cover the acreage of all Appomattox County. Photocopies of these acreages are available to farmers and other interested persons.

Price support loans are available for all commodity crops. This provides the farmers with operating capital until he is ready to sell the commodity. Participation in this program is minimal in Appomattox, however there are usually several farmers that express interest and obtain this type of loan.

Also available are storage and dryer loans. This enables the farmer to build on the farm storage space. The farmers has eight years with seven installments to repay this loan. We now have a total of seven facility loans.

Normal crop acreages and yields are maintained on 491 farms in Appomattox County. These acreages are used to figure disaster payments and were also used to make wheat deficiency payments, as well as corn deficiency payments. Normal crop acreages replaced allotments in 1978.

The wool program is designed to encourage the production of quality of wool and provide farmers with a fair return for his production of wool. There are not many wool farmers in Appomattox but those that grow sheep usually participate in this program.

The local office also makes available a variety of other program services to Appomattox County farmers, some of these are measurement service, tree order blanks, crop appraising and other farm information.

The Forestry Incentive program assists landowners in planting trees for future production. There were nine farms participating in this program last year.

Tobacco operations through the ASCS offices covers fire tobacco (548 allotments) flue tobacco (81 allotments) burley tobacco (40 allotments) sun tobacco (6 allotments) and Maryland tobacco. Our responsibilities in the tobacco programs includes maintaining allotment records and yield records, issuing marketing cards, maintaining lease and transfer agreements and reconciling tobacco marketings.

The ASCS office also makes available a variety of other program services to Appomattox County farmers, some of which are: measurement service, crop appraising and other farm information.

Reporting Crop Acreages - Farmers that are growing grain or tobacco crops on their farms this year are urged to report planted acreages to the ASCS office when planting is completed.

Grain producers participating in the Set-Aside program needs to report planted acreages to that they would remain in the program and be eligible for program benefits.

Grain producers not participating in the set-aside program are asked to report their planted acreages so that accurate records can be kept for future use and plans for summer field wogk can be made.

Tobacco producers need to report their planted acreages in order to be eligible for price support.

Farmers are reminded of the following final reporting dates:

June 30 - Corn, tobacco and set-aside land.

July 15 - Grain sorghum and Soybeans.

Flue-Cured Tobacco Discount Varieties - Flue-cured tobacco producers will be required to certify that no tobacco seed varieties identified as Coker 139, Coker 140, Coker 316, Reams 64 or Dixie Bright 244 were planted this year. Planting any of these varieties will result in no price support.

Pesticide Certification - All tobacco producers will again this year be required to certify they have not used any pesticide contains DDT, TDE, Toxaphene or Endrin after the tobacco has been planted. Use of these pesticide will result in no price support.

Flue-Cured Co-Op Meeting Set - Billy W. Hill, President of the Flue-Cured Tobacco Cooperative Stabilization Corporation, and Fred G. Bond, the CO-OP's General Manager have announced the 33rd annual CO-Op meeting will gain this year be held at the Kerr-Scott Pavilion on the North Carolina State Fairgrounds in Raleigh, North Carolina. The meeting will be held on Friday, May 25, and will begin at 10 a.m.

The Honorable James H. Williams, Deputy Secretary of the USDA will be the featured speaker. Also, a complimentary barbecue lunch will be served to all in attendance.

Fire and Sun Cured Tobacco Leasing - Fire and sun cured tobacco producers are reminded that June 1 is the final date for leasing and transferring tobacco for the 1979 crop year.

Producers are urged to finalize all agreements just as soon as possible.

People have believed that diamonds can only be found at night.

YOUR GARDEN

Fruit Of The Vine

You can grow great grapes in your garden, eat them, turn them into wine, raisins, jams and jellies very easily.

Here are some hints on how from the experts who created the Reader's Digest Illustrated Guide to Gardening, a 672-page, beautifully illustrated book on almost every aspect of gardening.

GROWING YOUR OWN GORGEOUS GRAPES can enlarge your larder.

Good drainage and at least moderately fertile soil are essential for grape cultivation. A fertile loam of medium texture is best. The vines should have full sunlight if the fruit is to have a sugar content high enough for juice, wine or good eating.

Grape vines can be planted in early spring in a hole slightly deeper and wider than their root systems. Plant the vines in rows, about six feet apart and with about eight feet between rows.

Grapes require a lot of moisture. They respond well to mulching early in spring, particularly to well-rooted manure mixed with straw.

You may find that growing your own grapes can be a very fruitful enterprise.

Childhood Depression

"I am the biggest trouble-maker in my family," said a worried-looking 10-year-old girl. "I cry a lot and feel weird a lot."

Between spells of crying, a 12-year-old boy said, "I think I am the stupidist kid in class . . . I never really try to kill myself, but sometimes I think to drown myself."

A dejected 8-year-old girl declared: "I feel ugly and like a dumbbell . . . Sometimes I would like to kill my friends or my own stomach or arm . . . Friends make fun of me all the time."

These children were talking to child psychiatrists at the National Institute of Mental Health (NIMH). They were children or grandchildren of recently admitted patients who had been referred by their doctor to the NIMH Intramural Research Program for observation and treatment of a depressive psychosis. More than half were considered "severely depressed" at the time of the interview.

Though the incidence of this disorder has risen dramatically steadily with age, as a recent report points out, "the growing rate of depression in the young has brought about a peak period in youth that outstrips middle age and is exceeded only by the elderly."

It also was found that many children diagnosed as hyperactive may actually be depressed.

Indications of depression in children—particularly when something has gone wrong at home, at playground, or school—are quite common. Usually, though, these indications do not last long. The problem is judged to be depressive illness if it continues for at least several months "and is associated with severe impairment of the child's scholastic and social adjustment and with disturbances" in eating and sleeping. "In more serious cases the child's thinking is affected by feelings of despair and hopelessness, general retardation, and, in the severe form, by suicidal thoughts," the NIMH report states.

The pediatrician or family physician is in the best position to detect early indications of childhood depression. Each knows the family's history and the parent-child relationship "and can observe the child directly for any sign of depressive mood and behavior." Also in a strategic position is the school or child guidance clinic.

The doctor's role may be particularly valuable in suspected cases of masked depression, "in which the child is usually regarded by the family (and often by the school) as delinquent or bad."

UNDERSTANDING ALCOHOLISM

a health column from the

Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration

U.S. Department of Health, Education, and Welfare

Women and Minor Tranquilizers

The general population—and especially women, it seems—are more likely to combine alcohol with psychotropics than with other drugs.

According to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, it is fairly certain that the public, and many physicians as well, are unaware of the serious effect that tranquilizers—as central nervous system (CNS) depressants—can have when used with alcohol, which is also a CNS depressant.

The minor tranquilizers are the drugs most often combined with alcohol, studies have shown. One investigator has placed the minor tranquilizers in the same psychopharmacologic class as barbiturates, with the same potential for serious or fatal interactions with alcohol.

When alcohol interacts with another drug in the body, the combination may result in a reduction of the effects of either or both drugs—known as an "antagonistic interaction." On the other hand, it may produce an interaction in which the combined effects of the drugs is greater than the sum of their effects might be. This is also known as "supra-additive interaction."

From the public health point of view, supra-additive drug interactions are the most hazardous. One such is the highly dangerous combination of alcohol and barbiturates. A 10-year study on drug-related deaths in Ontario suggested that blood levels as low as 0.5 percent of the barbiturates secobarbital or pentobarbital combined with blood alcohol levels of 0.1 percent caused death from respiratory suppression. Another series of studies showed severe intoxication occurred with blood alcohol concentrations in the 0.06 to 0.16 percent range in persons who had taken barbiturates. Symptoms included unconsciousness, extended sleep, vomiting, and severe motor impairment.

There is also a fourth type of alcohol-drug interaction experienced by alcoholics or heavy drinkers. Chronic alcohol use can produce tolerance to alcohol, and it can also produce diminished responses, or a kind of tolerance to other drugs, depending upon the kind of drug. "Cross-tolerance," as this condition is termed, does not always require previous exposure to the secondary drug in order to create problems. (An example cited by the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism is the common clinical observation that alcoholics are more difficult to anesthetize with ether than nonalcoholics.)

There would appear to be serious implications here for women who are heavy drinkers and use other drugs in combination with alcohol.

CONSUMER REPORT

Go To The Top

It may take many letters and months of waiting, but if you feel that a large company has cheated you, a letter to the company president may help.

When an Allstate policyholder complained that his car was hit by another car also insured by Allstate, the insurance company at first sent the damaged driver a check for only $112, even though the damage amounted to $312.

Phone calls with many people at Allstate didn't bring the insured a better offer, but two months after the accident, and after he wrote to the insurance company's president, the insured was offered another $100.

If you feel that you have been cheated in a way that also may affect many other consumers, a letter to your Congressman's office may bring you both corrective action from the company and—if appropriate—perhaps a new law prohibiting similar abuse in the future.
